Title: Clark - Dunham Family Photographs
 Dates of creation: n.d.
 Extent of the unit of description: 2 boxes; .75 linear feet

Scope & Content / Abstract:

Abstract: This collection consists of photographs from the Clark-Dunham and Apgar families. The majority of the images are studio portraits, but only a minority are identified. There are pictures of assorted people on a variety of dates, and different occasions. The collection has been arranged according to identified photos, portrait/studio photos followed by grouping according to a theme suggested by similarities of the subject. Of interest are the identifiable photographs of the Clark-Dunham and Apgar families, and two tintypes. One group of photographs appears to have been taken at the Philadelphia Sesquicentennial held in 1925.

Scope and Content: There are 83 folders separated into five series. The portrait/studio photographs are filed one per folder with identified pictures (folders 1 through 16) followed by the two tintypes (folder 17). The next series is unidentified or only partially identified images, still mostly studio portraits of single subjects or family groups (folders 17 through 69). Smaller photographs, previously contained in an album are placed in enclosures (envelopes 70 through 82) according to a theme. There is one heavily damaged photograph of the town of Clinton, looking east along Main Street taken from the hill behind the Red Mill [folder 83]. The photographs appear to be dated before and after 1925.
